How to identify the line number when an error is detected in Octave I am using Octave 3.8.4 on a *nix machine. I am plotting a 3d surface plot and one of the variables (f(x,y)) is not giving the expected value. How can I find out the line number that is being hit as this is necessary to find out whether the code was written improperly or whether this is a bug in Octave and I need to file a bug report. A: You have to launch octave with the -d switch, e.g. octave -d plot3d(0,0,0,z) On the command line, there will be a plot3d command, which will return an Octave error with the line number of the faulty line. Background Marketing is complicated. Sometimes it's very clear what you should be doing. Other times, you're casting around to figure out what to do, and discovering a combination of several previously unknown principles — ones you might not have even imagined existed — that ultimately form an effective approach. I've spent a few years discovering such new marketing principles. As a result, I spend a lot of my time thinking of ideas for how to apply these principles in new ways. Recently, I came up with one that I think is really powerful and fun. I want to share it with you. The word "Fun" may have another meaning. But at eBay, fun is more about when you're about to lose money and you're

We sought to determine the frequency of subdural hematoma (SDH) in a cohort of postmenopausal women prescribed hormone replacement therapy (HRT). Furthermore, we sought to determine the age and HRT dosage of women who developed SDH. This study is a retrospective review of clinic records and radiographic studies of women who were seen at our institution between January 1, 1979 and January 1, 1995. The records of 841 women were reviewed, and 16 (1.9%) were identified to be receiving HRT. These 16 patients were divided into subgroups based on age, HRT dosage, and duration of HRT use. The average age at presentation was 67.7 years (range, 40 to 93 years). The mean duration of HRT use was 7.7 years (range, 0 to 21 years). One patient was previously being treated for hypertension and diabetes and had been receiving H 648931e174
