Q: why don't I get a "multiple definition of 'login' " when I compile this code?

#include #include #include #include "auth_funcs.h" int main() { char password[20]; char username[20]; printf("Enter the username:"); gets(username); printf("Enter the password:");
gets(password); login(username, password); return 0; }

I can't figure out why when I do gcc my_prog.c I don't get the compilation error. A: You need to tell the compiler where you have declared login: #include "auth_funcs.h" #include "login.h" int main() { /*... */ #if defined(login) login(username, password); #endif #if defined(login) /*... */ #endif } A: That's because you have a circular include dependency. A: You have circular dependence. Just change line: #include "auth_funcs.h"

to #include "auth_funcs.h" #include "login.h" Q: Check if server time is in the past for a network file I'm not sure if this is the right forum but I'm here so... I have a set of files that on my local pc are sometimes generated at times that are in the past and sometime
