Denied the right to vote, denied the right to represent his people, denied a seat at the table, denied the right to run for office, not even a government position – denied the right to serve. This election is a milestone in the history of the Black community in America. “I am so happy that after more than 200 years, this election has taken place,” said Dr. Chaka Fattah. “I am proud of every single black person who voted for Ben Carson and for every single Republican who helped put him in office. I am so grateful to Gov. Lofi Hollow is a roguelike "Sudoku for the masses", built with a simple yet powerful design. Players take on the role of a single character who must survive a devious and dangerous world. The game is randomized - nothing is the same twice! Where the game differs from other roguelikes is the player's unending curiosity to explore new things, to dig for more, and to engage with people and the many other things in the world. Rule Of Survival: You must keep yourself well-fed and equipped at all times, or your character will perish. Finding suitable things to eat, drink and wear are common challenges every player will face in Lofi Hollow. New things are discovered as you explore, and tend to be useful for certain roles within a single playthrough. Currency: Currency is generated by discovering items, completing tasks, and engaging with people and entities throughout Lofi Hollow. Current plans for currency are as follows: • Recovering items: All items you find in a town or dungeon will be recorded, and that amount of currency is added to your inventory at the end of each new game. • Getting things from people: Talking to and helping other players earns you money. The amount of money depends on the player's level. • Doing things: Daily tasks are rewarded by money for specific tasks you complete. • Engaging with other people: Some interactions with people or tasks are rewarded with money. User Interface: The GUI features two windows. The right-hand window is used for player input, and displays what's currently in an inventory, or in other words, what the player has. The left-hand window is used to display things that are not in inventory. Entities that the player can engage with (including other players, resources, and monsters) are displayed in the left-hand window, and are only displayed when the player can do so. The GUI is built for performance reasons and thus should be easy for any player to use. Player Input: Inputting items into inventory and changing mouse input are not complicated functions. For obvious reasons, we'd rather have players use these for other things. Wanting to buy a sword and an axe from a merchant? Sure, go ahead. Wanting to call an NPC to ask a favor? Why not! The following items are currently on the table: • Camera: Camera controls the camera and determines where the player is looking. Currently, the player

What's new in Elteria Hunter:

There were four people there—only four... and one of them was dead and they'd killed him... which wasn't good. The back room was small, barely large enough for three people to stand and talk comfortably. The body lay where it'd fallen, his hand still grasping the paring knife in his chest. Blood and gore covered nearly everything—and one of the others was covered in blood too. Drenched in the stuff. Ralts, it came to me after a moment. That hand didn't want to let go, but it couldn't control where it fell. It didn't want to let go of the knife. Why wasn't Miro there with them? "We should be leaving here soon. There are my orders," the man I only ever remember as Commander Frost said. I turned to look at him. The man who was the father of Frost's friend. "A couple hours," the man said, looking at the time on his handheld. "It's not far, once things quiet down. Better to be in the open, though, otherwise we'll be too exposed. How close are they?" "There are five of them," I said. Frost pointed a finger at me, a smile on his lips. "Yeah, we know," he said. "You aren't stupid enough to say another word." "No, I'm not. Or I wouldn't," I said. "I heard all of that, though." "Course you did," Snow said. "They all know you're here, you know. None of the others. We'll all be leaving, soon. This is the last wave." "Six," I pointed out. "Six," Snow said. I couldn't help the smile he sent my way. "All right then, ready?" Frost asked. "You know I am." Frost kissed his daughter on her cheek. She squirmed away, but he only laughed, leaving Frost

DESCRIPTION: "I was raised in a society where I learned how to be a TV-show contestant and a detective. This is me on my greatest adventure yet: the intergalactic gameshow, LONELY. I'm the only contestant who's already entered on the show. My actions determine whether I'll enjoy the fun or get blown up. My friends are the crew of the spaceship called the Lonely Bird. We're on our way to an Alpha Centauri Star. There's really no other reason to be on this show. Death is sure to be swift if things don't go according to plan, but if I survive, I'll have the experience of a lifetime." —Annie, legendary detective, on being the star of her very own TV show "Television is pure fantasy. I know that. It's a glorified, sanitised, pre-programmed, five-day-a-week, sleepy, meaningless, automaton. But this, it's a real, physical, everyday thing that comes into my life. It's whatever. It doesn't matter. Because I've got to show up. That's all that matters. Everyone is bound by the same rules. Everybody's on their own island. They're all my friends. And I'm just getting my freak on." —Annie, legendary detective, on being the star of her very own TV show  "A sweeping, darkly amusing story about teenage alienation, idolatry and the exhilaration of friendship, mixing lyrical beauty with an almost
